

The OpenSource in Space Podcast

Sunday, December 13, 2020 4:18 PM (4 minutes)

Open-source projects are great but discovering new projects is not that easy and keeping up-to-date with existing projects on a deeper level takes time and often a founded understanding of the project is necessary since these teams lag dedicated PR departments. But what if a central hub would exist where the makers themselves could explain their ideas and thoughts and - even more convenient - if I could get this information when my brain runs in idle anyway: during my regular workouts? While I cook or clean the dishes? While I commute to work?

I want to launch an interview podcast to make open-source space projects more visible for the community and to provide a platform where the projects can talk about big updates for the community in an easily reachable way.

In my presentation I want to talk about the following topics:

- the general idea of the podcast
- the benefits why anyone should participate
- the general structure of each episode
- the general plan for the future

Current Website of the project:

<https://jan-peter.space/os2>

Jan-Peter Ceglarek, polaris

@jan-peter:matrix.org

+4915772938111

Author: CEGLAREK, Jan-Peter

Session Classification: Room #1